Main contractor found for North Zealand's new super hospital

After good and intense negotiations, two contracting firms each put in an offer to build the new super hospital in North Zealand. Now NCC has been given the assignment.

On June 26th, NCC got an important message. The Nordic contracting firm has gotten the assignment to be main contractor for the Capital Region of Denmark's new super hospital in North Zealand.

Aside from NCC, a bid was made by Italian Rizzani de Eccher in conjunction with Austrian Vamed, specialized in construction, as subcontractor.

"Overall, NCC made the best bid and have therefore gotten the assignment", says Henrik Schødts, Project Chief Executive of New North Zealand Hospital, the project organization behind the new super hospital. He continues:

"I would like to take this moment to thank both contractors for the tenacious and professional effort made by the parties throughout this process. Both companies have great experience with large public and private constructions, and they've shown great enthusiasm towards our megaproject, as well as an understanding of the way we want to complete it."

Henrik Schødts refers to the new super hospitals as a unique opportunity to create new solutions in the fields of technology, architecture and design, lifting public expectations for hospitals. If the goal is to be achieved within a tight budget, an efficient and digitalized building process is required.

Early cooperation begins

By the assigning of NCC as the main contractor, the early stage of cooperation begins. In the time coming, NCC along with New North Zealand Hospital and the project's advisors will incorporate suggestions for optimization, to ensure the construction can be completed in the best possible way within the budget. That is a condition within the contract.

"We are happy to have found a main contractor for the construction of the new hospital in North Zealand. Now we hope the coming cooperation will live up to our expectations, so that we will see the construction unfold in Favrholt soon", says Per Tærsebøl, chairman of the political steering committee for New North Zealand Hospital.

In the bid from NCC, completion time is set for 48 months.
